Social and Personal

A pretty tea yesterday afternoon was that at which Mrs. W. N. Fishburn, of 310 East Franklin Street, was hostess. The affair was in honor of Mrs. Peyton Harrison Hoge, of Louisville, Ky., who is a guest of Mrs. John C. Freeman, and the guests included a number of schoolmates and friends of Mrs. Hoge, who was before her marriage Miss Mary Stuart Holladay, of this city. The parlors were decorated in yellow and white daisies, and the tea table was set with a big basket of spring flowers and yellow shaded candles.

Mrs. Fishburn received with the guest of honor and Miss Margaret Freeman served fruit punch. Assisting in the dining-room were Misses Ethel Loving, Carrie and Elizabeth Talliferro.

Leaving Town.—Mrs. Louis Grafflin left town yesterday for her home in Jacksonville, Fla., after a short visit to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Eden Peyton, Jr., on Park Avenue. Mrs. Grafflin has been in Fauquier County for the past several weeks visiting relatives at "Edenburne" and Warrenton.

At the Woman's Club.—There was a delightful informal tea at the Woman's Club yesterday afternoon and members dropped into the club parlors for a sociable cup of tea from 5 to 7 o'clock. Big bowls of rare red robins and daisies decorated the tea tables. It was a very attractive and pleasing event, and these teas will be continued at the club each Monday afternoon until further notice.

Annual Art Exhibit.—The annual exhibit of the art department of the Woman's College will be held at the college on Wednesday. The public is invited to inspect the work of the pupils from 4 to 6 in the afternoon. From 8 to 10 o'clock that evening guests have been invited to see the exhibition and attend a reception given by the art students.

At the Art Club.—A large audience will fill the rooms of the Art Club of Richmond this afternoon.

WEDDED TO ART; NO TIME FOR HUSBAND

Mrs. Sheridan, Preferring Congenial Surroundings, Does Not Oppose Divorce.

Reno, Nev., May 26.—Wedded to her art and congenial surroundings, Sarah McDonald Sheridan, professional singer of New York, living at the National Art Club, and occupied with concert tours and private musical instructions, had no time for her husband, and consequently lost a husband in the divorce court here through her alleged desertion of Charles Oscar Sheridan, a professional musician and decorative architect, formerly of New York, and later of Los Angeles. Sheridan was compelled to come West on account of ill health, and his wife promised to join him in the divorce court here through her alleged desertion of Charles Oscar Sheridan, a professional musician and decorative architect, formerly of New York, and later of Los Angeles. Sheridan was compelled to come West on account of ill health, and his wife promised to join him in the divorce court here through her alleged desertion of Charles Oscar Sheridan, a professional musician and decorative architect, formerly of New York, and later of Los Angeles.

When I urged her to join me in California, she persistently refused, declaring that she preferred the congenial surroundings of her husband's home, and that she would not leave him. She was a woman of great talent and ability, and her husband was a man of great talent and ability. They were married in New York, and their marriage was a happy one. But when Sheridan came to Reno, his wife refused to join him, and he was forced to seek a divorce. The court granted the divorce, and Sheridan is now a single man.

WILLING TO TAKE OATH

As to the Truthfulness of Statements in Beneath Letter, Says Mrs. Cook.

Denison, Texas.—"You may print any statement from this letter you please," writes Mrs. Jess Cook, of 207 1-2 Main St., this city, "and I am willing to swear to its truthfulness."

On the third of April I had an operation performed, for womanly trouble, thinking that would make me well.

In a few weeks after the operation I got down again, and I was advised to have another operation. I would not listen to this.

Having heard so much about Cardui, the woman's tonic, I decided I would try it.

I have taken only seven bottles, and believe I am a well woman. Have no pains at all, and the other trouble has disappeared. Have gained both in health and strength.

My weight now is 149 pounds. Before taking Cardui I was 105 pounds. I really know that I am well, but keep a bottle of Cardui in the house all the time, for use in case I need it.

Several of my lady friends are already taking Cardui on my advice, and I wish all other suffering women would try it.

Cardui will surely do as much for you as it did for the writer of the above letter, if you will only give it a trial.

If you are sick, it may be just the medicine you need.

Expert Corset Advice Gladly Given Upon Request

THALHIMER'S

Have You Ever Worn a Rengo Belt Corset?

If not, you do not know what corset comfort is. The Rengo Belt Corsets support the figure where needed, gives an erect and graceful carriage and freedom of movement that assures an amount of satisfaction you have never thought possible in a corset. There is a Rengo Belt for each and every medium, stout and extra stout figure. Some of the latest models have elastic bands and inserts of elastic gores so as to make sitting down more comfortable in the long corsets, at the same time moulding the figure as snug as a glove. Rengo Belt Corsets absolutely reduce the hips and abdomen without injury, and are guaranteed not to rust or break; boned throughout with double watch spring steel and whalebone, made of domestic and imported cutlery; several styles—low, medium and high bust, for $2.00, $3.00 and $5.00.

NATIONALIST PARTY DOES NOT GAIN VOTE

Hon. William Gibson Devoted to Ireland, but at Heart He Is Tory.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.

IRELAND'S Nationalist party gains no vote in the House of Lords through the succession of the Hon. William Gibson to the barony of Ashbourne, the late Lord Ashbourne, who succeeded very suddenly to heart disease on Thursday last in London, while walking in Hyde Park. For, although Gibson is an ardent devotee to every thing Irish, especially to the old customs, traditions and ancient language of the Emerald Isle, he remains, like his father before him, a Tory. To the new Lord Ashbourne belongs the credit of being one of the originators of the Gaelic movement, which may be described as a revolt of the Hibernian mind against all that has happened in Ireland since the date of the treaty of Limerick, and as an endeavor to revive everything pertaining to the Erin of olden times.

Among other interesting forms of this revival, has been that of dress, and Lord Ashbourne has devoted much trouble and money to researches bearing on the subject, in the belief that the recalling into existence of the distinctive Irish garb of long ago will accomplish the same result as the retention of the kilt and tartan in the Highlands of Scotland, in keeping alive national sentiment.

Many people in America imagine that it is purely Scotch, but, like whiskey, it is purely Irish. From Ireland, where the real old national garb, worn for hundreds of years, consisted of a kilt, generally saffron-colored, a shoulder-plaid or shawl over the shoulder, silver or silver-colored, a short jacket, often curiously patterned and elaborately embroidered. The knees, however, were not bare, as in Scotland, and the legs were clothed by "trews," a single garment, combining the uses of trousers and stockings. The cloak was full and of ample cut, and some of its readers will refer to it as being "an ideal one for the Irish outlaws."

Although the Highlanders of Scotland were forbidden at times, during the Jacobite insurrections, to don a kilt, yet, on the whole, they were much less molested in this respect than the Irish, and consequently have never really ceased to wear their distinctive garb. But Henry VIII., with the object of stamping out every vestige of nationalism among the opponents of his rule in Ireland, enacted a number of penal statutes, providing dire punishment for any Irish patriot who should dare to adhere to the style of dress of his forefathers. Under the same statutes which carefully and elaborately enumerated every article of Hibernian raiment forbidden by the crown and favor of silver, and which, by an irony of fate, served the new Lord Ashbourne and his associates in their efforts to reconstitute and revive the old Irish garb.

Lord Ashbourne and his brothers have frequently appeared therein, not only at Gaelic entertainments and meetings, but likewise in society at Dublin, and even in London. In fact, his appearance thus arrayed within the precincts of the palace at Westminster. The eldest sons of peers have the privilege of standing or sitting on a cushion of purple during debates in the House of Lords. But when the Hon. William Gibson, as he was then, endeavored to avail himself of this time-honored prerogative, attired in his saffron Irish kilt, Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson, the gentleman usher of the Black Rod to the King, assigned by the latter to attendance on the House of Lords at Westminster, refused to admit him, on the ground that the Irish kilt was an improper garb, being contrary to law.

As Black Rod had never offered any opposition to the wearing of Highland dress by Scotch peers in the House of Lords, his action with regard to William Gibson aroused a storm of indignation among the Irish party in the House of Commons, who denounced his invidious and discriminatory laws of the reign of Henry VIII., which should have long since been repealed, as an act of medieval oppression.

I understand that when the present Lord Ashbourne was elected some years ago to membership of the Athenaeum Club in London, his father, the late peer, was compelled to give an undertaking that his son would not enter the club in Irish dress. Hence it is understood that he proposes to wear this garb when he first takes his seat in the House of Lords. Inasmuch as it will be concealed by his peer's robes, no objection will be offered while he is conducted by his two sponsors, and by Garter King-at-Arms to the woolsack, and hands to the Lord High Chancellor of England his sumptuous robes of state. But when, after having thus established his right to his vote in the House of Lords, and completed the ceremony of inauguration, he doffs his peer's robes in order to take his seat in the House, trouble on the part of Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson, who is still usher of the Black Rod, may be looked for, since the 400-year-old kilt still remains on the statute books.

One of Lord Ashbourne's brothers, the Hon. Victor Gibson, has an American wife, in the person of Caroline, daughter of the late Frederic De Bille, of New York. The family here from Tipperary, and its fortunes may be said to have been founded by Lord Ashbourne's grandfather, William Gibson, who had a beautiful place, known as Rock Forest, in Tipperary, and combined the functions of a landed magnate and country gentleman with those of a particularly wide-awake lawyer in Dublin. While Rock Forest went to William Gibson's eldest son, his younger son, who eventually was created Lord Ashbourne, inherited the fine old family mansion in Merion Square, Dublin, which now passes to the new Lord Ashbourne. It is a grand old house, dating from the time when the Irish aristocracy of the eighteenth century were compelled to spend a portion of the year in Dublin, in order to attend the sessions of Ireland's House of Lords and House of Commons, prior to the time when Merion Square was the headquarters of the richest of these legislators in those days.

One of the features of the Ashbourne mansion there is the wonderful collection of ancient swords, muskets, pistols, blunderbusses and other less civilized weapons, which absolutely cover the walls of the great entrance hall, to the exclusion of every other form of adornment. They form a peculiarly appropriate decoration, since Lord Ashbourne, like his brothers, has inherited the aggressiveness and downright pugilism for which the late Lord Chancellor Ashbourne was celebrated. Indeed, it is difficult to find a more ardent and disinterested set of people than the Gibsons, who, in their most amiable moments, convey the impression of always spoiling for a true Irish shindy.

Mrs. Frederick W. Isaacson, who has just died at her London house in Upper Grosvenor Street, where she made her home with her only daughter, widow of the late Lord Beaumont, was far more widely known by her trade name of Mme. Elise, under which she kept in London a great millinery and dress-making establishment, in Regent Street, much patronized by Americans.

Daughter of a money-changer, in a small way, of the name of Stephen Jaeger, at Frankfurt on Main, she acquired a considerable fortune in the dressmaking business before marrying Frederick Isaacson, belonging to the same race as herself, and who, thanks to her money, was able to stand for Parliament, securing election for the Stepney division of the metropolis.

As the wife of a member of the House of Commons, Mrs. Isaacson demanded and obtained presentation at court, and it was owing to the protests of a number of women of rank at the royal drawing-room, who expressed their objection to meeting their dressmakers and milliners there, that Queen Victoria's famous rule was established that no woman engaged in trade should be admitted to court.

This rule had a wider scope than originally contemplated, and it was intended merely to keep out such women as the late Mrs. Isaacson. It was applied to all of those women of high rank and social position who were compelled by financial stringency to resort to trade for a livelihood, by opening shops for millinery, dressmaking, bric-a-brac, flowers, cigarettes, etc. As the matter stands now, the moment that a woman who has already been presented embarks in trade, her name is barred from the court list until she abandons her enterprise.

Mrs. Isaacson was able to give a very large dowry to her daughter, and when the latter married the ninth Lord Beaumont. But the union was of comparatively brief duration, and she was brought to a close about four years through the peer's death, without issue. (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

VIGOROUS ACTION BEING PLANNED

Department of Justice Will Not Relax Vigilance Against Corporation.

SUITS ARE CONTEMPLATED

Attorney-General Is Directing Close Investigation of Law Violations.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Chicago, May 26.—Vigorous prosecutions of corporations and individuals for violations of the antitrust law will be undertaken by the department of Attorney-General J. C. McReynolds. Mr. McReynolds is directing a number of important government investigations, which may lead to new prosecutions. Recently it was announced that the government would renew its efforts to punish James A. Patten and others, who engaged in a cotton pool in the New York market. During the Taft administration this case was carried on its criminal features to the Supreme Court by Patten and others, who had been indicted.

The government was disappointed in the decision, and Attorney-General Reynolds proposes to have another test of the law in his plan to prevent market corners on commodities. Experts have been sent to New England to investigate the New Haven transportation monopoly, and into Washington and Oregon to investigate the telephone trust said to exist there. Each of these investigations is expected to result in important government suits. The New Haven case has been pending for some time, and the special investigation to be made by the department of justice will be sweeping and searching.

A force of twenty special investigators will be sent out June 1 by the department to probe the American Smelter and Refining Company, especially with respect to its control of the Federal Smelter Company and the acquisition of the latter company's stock. Preliminary investigations of the American Smelter and Refining Company are held to justify a general inquiry into the affairs of the smelter trust with a view to prosecution for violation of the antitrust laws.

Attorney-General McReynolds has under consideration another prosecution of the American Tobacco Company, and is directing a general investigation of this trust originally instituted by the department of justice to test the law to see if the dissolution of the trust could be made more effective. The trust's eight stores escaped under the first decision.

It is possible also that contempt action will be brought against the Standard Oil Company on the charge that it has failed to comply with the dissolution as directed by the Supreme Court. The decrees in this case have all been handed down, and the lower federal court has approved the dissolution plan presented by the company. The contempt would lie in failure by the company to obey the decree strictly.

Next week the government will file its briefs in the Federal court of Philadelphia against the anthracite coal carriers and allied coal companies for their refusal to carry out the decrees of the independent mining companies. These contracts were held to have been in violation of the law, and the Supreme Court so as to exclude a number of the contractors.

Mr. McReynolds is moving to enforce the antitrust laws on the assumption that he will be given the necessary money by Congress for the work. Officials of the Taft administration contended that the necessary $50,000 needed to enable them to prosecute the trusts was not available. Mr. McReynolds is working now under the appropriation then allowed to Attorney-General William Howard Taft, and the department has not asked for more money.

METHODISTS ARE IN CONFERENCE

Opening Sermon at Charlottesville Meeting Preached by Bishop Denny.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Charlottesville, Va., May 26.—The Charlottesville District Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in its forty-fifth annual session in Trinity Methodist Church, Orange, at 8 o'clock this evening, with Bishop Collins Denny, of Richmond, occupying the chair. There was an unusually large attendance of delegates and visitors. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. A. C. Jordan, of Amherst County.

Among the topics to be discussed tomorrow are the Sunday school, Epworth League interests and the missionary work within the district. James C. White and J. O. Barksdale, of Albemarle, will speak on the Sunday school, and Bishop Denny will preach at 11:30 A. M. In the afternoon S. F. Hamm, of this city, will submit the report for the conference on the Epworth League.

The object and the leading features of the Wayneville Conference, which will be held the latter part of June, will be presented by W. T. Martin, of this city. Four hundred of the most prominent lay members of the Virginia conference are expected to attend this great convention, to be held on the Southern Assembly grounds, in North Carolina.

Professor J. H. Binford, secretary of the Co-operative Educational Association of Virginia, will deliver an illustrated lecture. The conference will be in session on Wednesday, and will close on the evening of that day.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

Crosses of Honor Are Restowed Upon Several Veterans.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Charlottesville, Va., May 26.—The Albemarle Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, assisted by the John Bowie Strange Camp of Confederate Veterans, observed Memorial Day to-day at the cemetery at the University of Virginia. The exercises, which were in charge of Captain H. Clay Michie, commander of the camp, began at 4:30 o'clock. The invocation was by Dr. George L. Petrie, of the Presbyterian Church, and the address of the occasion was made by Professor William M. Thompson, of the University of Virginia. The Monticello Guard, under Captain Thomas P. Peyton, and the John Bowie Strange Camp attended the exercises in a body.

Crosses of honor were bestowed upon the following veterans: J. M. Daniel, J. D. Nimmo, S. P. Snow and J. J. Uta. Crosses were also bestowed upon the following widows or descendants of veterans: Mrs. Annie Brooks, Mrs. Mary E. Burton, Mrs. Helen G. Eastman, Miss Gillie M. Hill, Mrs. Pattle S.
